

HER NEW ERA

The 30-Day Life Reset System

A guided reset for the woman who's ready to stop starting over and start becoming — one intentional day at a time.

"You don't need a whole new life. You need thirty honest days."

HER NEW ERA AI

This Is Your New Era

Read this before you begin

If you picked this up, some part of you already knows: the version of you that's been coasting, overwhelmed, or stuck on autopilot isn't the version you're meant to keep living as. Good. That awareness is the entire starting line.

This isn't a productivity challenge and it isn't about becoming a "better" version of someone else's life. The 30-Day Life Reset is a structured, honest reset of four areas that quietly run everything else: your mindset, your environment, your habits, and your direction. You'll spend a week on each — not rushing, not performing, just resetting.

Most "reset your life" content skips straight to habits and routines, because habits are the easiest thing to see and photograph. But habits built on top of an unexamined mindset don't hold — you white-knuckle them for eleven days and then quietly stop, and quietly blame yourself for it. This system works in the order it does because each week makes the next one possible: you can't reset your environment intentionally until you know who you're resetting it for, you can't build habits that stick until the environment supports them, and you can't choose a real direction until you have some evidence, from the habits, that you follow through.

By day 30, you will have:

- ☐ Named the beliefs and patterns that were quietly running your old era
- ☐ Reset your physical space and daily rhythm to support the woman you're becoming
- ☐ Built four keystone habits that don't rely on motivation
- ☐ A clear, written direction for the next 90 days — not a vague hope, an actual plan
- ☐ Thirty days of dated, written proof that you can follow through on yourself

How to use this system

Each week has a theme, a daily prompt, and a simple daily check-in. Some days ask more of you than others — that's intentional. Do them in order. Don't skip to the "fun" weeks. The reset works because it builds, and because it's cumulative, missing a day isn't a failure — it just means you pick up where you left off tomorrow, not back at Day 1.

You'll notice the prompts get shorter as the month goes on. That's on purpose — by Week 4 you shouldn't need as much instruction, because you'll already be running on the identity you built in Weeks 1 through 3.

Optional AI companion prompt: "I'm on Day [X] of a 30-day life reset focused on [week theme]. Here's what I wrote today: [paste your entry]. Reflect it back to me honestly and ask me one question that helps me go deeper."

The Four Pillars of Your Reset

One per week, in this order — no skipping ahead

- Week 1 — Mindset Reset

Clear out the beliefs, self-talk, and old identity you've been running on. You can't build a new era on top of an old story.
- Week 2 — Environment Reset

Your space, your phone, your calendar, your circle. Reset the containers your life actually happens inside of.
- Week 3 — Habit Reset

Install four keystone habits — small enough to be automatic, strong enough to change the shape of your days.
- Week 4 — Direction Reset

Turn everything you've cleared and rebuilt into an actual plan for the next 90 days.

Your Daily Reset Ritual (5–10 minutes)

Step	What to do
1. Check in	Rate today 1–5: energy, mood, alignment with the woman you're becoming
2. Prompt	Answer the day's reflection prompt (this book or your journal)
3. One action	Do the one small action tied to this week's theme
4. Close	Write one sentence: "Today I chose ___ over my old pattern of ___."

Why "Just Thirty Days" Actually Works

Thirty days isn't a magic number for forming a permanent habit — real automaticity usually takes longer than that, and this workbook won't pretend otherwise. What thirty days is genuinely long enough for is proving something to yourself: that you can commit to a version of yourself for a full month without abandoning her the second it gets inconvenient. That proof is the actual product here. The habits are the vehicle; the evidence is the destination.

Mindset Reset

Days 1–7 · Clear the old story before you write the new one

Every belief you hold about what you deserve, what you're capable of, and what's realistic for your life was installed somewhere — by a parent's offhand comment, a bad year, a comparison you made at nineteen and never revisited. This week isn't about "thinking positive." It's about finding the specific sentences running quietly in the background of your decisions, checking whether they're even true, and replacing the ones that aren't.

Day 1 · The Honest Audit

What has "old you" been believing about what you deserve, what you're capable of, and what's possible for your life? Write it without editing it — this page is private.

Day 2 · The Loudest Voice

Of everything you wrote yesterday, which belief comes up the most across different areas of your life (money, love, work, your body)? That's your loudest voice — name it in one sentence.

Day 3 · Where the Belief Came From

Whose voice does it actually sound like? When did you start believing it was true? Be specific — a moment, an age, a person.

Day 4 · Fact-Checking It

Would you say this same sentence to a friend in your exact situation? If not, why do you allow it as true for you?

Day 5 · The Rewrite

Replace it. Not with toxic positivity — with something specific and believable. "I'm bad with money" becomes "I'm learning to manage money well, and I'm already better at it than I was a year ago."

Day 6 · Evidence Collection

List 10 moments — big or small — that prove your old belief wrong. This is the hardest day and the most important one.

Day 7 · Week 1 Reflection

What's one belief you're officially retiring? What are you replacing it with? How did it feel to name it out loud?

Environment Reset

Days 8–14 · Reset the spaces your new era has to live inside

Willpower is a limited, exhaustible resource — environment isn't. A woman who has to fight her space, her phone, and her calendar every single day to act like her new self is fighting a battle she doesn't need to fight. This week is about making the easy choice the default choice, so future-you isn't relying on today's motivation to hold the line.

Day 8 · Physical Space

Reset one space today (nightstand, closet corner, desk). Notice how it changes your mood entering the room.

Day 9 · Phone Reset

Unfollow, mute, or delete anything that makes you feel behind, small, or numb. Add one account that reminds you who you're becoming.

Day 10 · Money Environment

Open the app you avoid. Just look. No spiraling, no fixing — just facing it with curiosity instead of shame.

Day 11 · Calendar Reset

Look at next week. Remove or renegotiate one thing that doesn't serve your new era.

Day 12–13 · The Circle Audit

Who leaves you feeling expanded after time together? Who leaves you feeling smaller? You don't have to cut anyone off today — just get honest on paper.

Name / relationship	Expands me or shrinks me?	One small boundary or step

Day 14 · Week 2 Reflection

Which reset made the biggest difference to how you felt this week? What's one environment change you're keeping permanently?

.....

The Environment Checklist

Go back through this any time a reset needs a refresh

Physical Space

- ☐ One surface in your home is fully clear, every day, no matter what
- ☐ The first thing you see when you wake up supports your mood, not drains it
- ☐ Clutter you've been "meaning to deal with" has an actual date on the calendar

Digital Space

- ☐ Notifications are limited to people, not apps
- ☐ Your camera roll's most recent screenshots reflect who you're becoming, not who drains you
- ☐ At least one account you follow actively makes you want to grow, not compare

Financial Space

- ☐ You know your real balance, not your assumed one
- ☐ One recurring subscription or expense has been reviewed this month
- ☐ You have a system for checking in — weekly, not just when something breaks

Pick One to Fix This Week

Out of everything above that isn't checked, which one, if fixed, would make the biggest difference to how your days feel?

.....

Habit Reset

Days 15–21 · Four keystone habits, small enough to stick

Pick four habits — one per category below. Keep each one absurdly small for now (2 minutes, one glass of water, one page). You're building the identity of someone who shows up, not chasing a perfect routine. A habit that's easy enough to do on your worst day is worth more than an ideal routine you can only manage on your best one.

Category	Your keystone habit	Trigger (I will do this right after ____)
Body
Mind
Money
Connection

7-Day Tracker

	Day 15	16	17	18	19	20	21
Body
Mind
Money
Connection

Day 21 · Week 3 Reflection

Which habit felt easiest to keep? Which one needs to get even smaller before Day 30? What does the answer tell you about where you're actually starting from?

.....

Troubleshooting Your Habits

If a habit isn't sticking, it's information — not failure

If this is happening...	Try this instead
You keep forgetting to do it	Attach it to a more reliable trigger, or leave a physical reminder in your path
You remember but skip it	The habit is still too big — cut it in half again
You do it but resent it	Check whether it's actually your goal, or one you inherited from someone else
You do it inconsistently on weekends	Design a separate, smaller "weekend version" now instead of aiming for one-size-fits-all

Your Habit Menu

If one of your four keystone habits isn't working, swap it for one of these starter options and keep going — momentum matters more than the specific habit.

Body: 10 squats, a glass of water on waking, a 5-minute walk

Mind: one page of a book, 3 things you're grateful for, 2 minutes of stillness

Money: check one account, log one expense, move $1 into savings

Connection: text one person, compliment someone, put your phone away during one meal

Direction Reset

Days 22–30 · Turn the reset into a real plan

Day 22–23 · Meet Her

Describe the woman you’re becoming 90 days from now — how she starts her mornings, how she handles stress, what she’s stopped tolerating.

Day 24–25 · Three Priorities

Of everything you could focus on next, name the three that matter most for the next 90 days.

Priority	Why it matters	First step

Day 26–28 · Build the 90-Day Map

For each priority, name what Month 1, Month 2, and Month 3 need to look like.

Day 29–30 · Close the Chapter

Write a short letter from you–today to you–thirty–days–ago. What do you want her to know? Then write one to the woman you’ll be in 90 days — what do you promise her you’ll keep doing?

Keeping the Reset Alive

What to do when the 30 days are over and life is still life

The reset doesn't end on Day 30 — that's just when the structure ends. What you do next determines whether this was a month you enjoyed or a month that actually changed something.

Run a Mini-Reset Every 90 Days

You don't need another full 30 days every quarter. A mini-reset is: one day auditing your mindset, one day resetting your environment, one day checking your habits, one day revisiting your direction. Put four dates on your calendar right now, 90 days apart.

Mini-Reset #	Date
1
2
3
4

If You Fall Off

You will, at some point, stop doing one of your habits or slide back into an old belief. That's not evidence the reset didn't work — it's evidence you're human. The only actual failure is deciding that one bad week means starting over from zero instead of just... starting today.

YOU DID THE WORK

This Is Just the Beginning of Your Era

Thirty days ago you were reading a table of contents.
Now you're holding a reset you actually lived through.
Keep the four pillars going — mindset, environment,
habits, direction — and check back in every 90 days.

*Continue your reset with the Identity & Self-Concept
Reset, the Habit & Routine Builder, or the full Her New Era collection.*

HER NEW ERA AI