The Declutter Challenge

14 days, one small zone at a time — small enough to actually finish, real enough to notice.

"You don't need a free weekend. You need fifteen minutes and a bag."

Small Zones, Real Progress

Read this first

Most decluttering attempts fail because "declutter the house" is too big to actually start. This challenge breaks it into 14 specific, small zones — most take 15-30 minutes — so you finish each day with something visibly done, not a half-emptied room you have to step around for a week.

The Three-Bag Method, Every Day

- ☐ Keep — stays exactly where it is, or gets a better home
- ☐ Donate/Sell — leaves the house within the week, not "eventually"
- ☐ Trash — no negotiating with genuinely broken or expired items

Week 1: Small Zones

Day	Zone	Done
1	One junk drawer
2	Bathroom cabinet
3	Purse/bag or car glovebox
4	One kitchen drawer
5	Phone charger/cable tangle
6	Medicine cabinet (check expiration dates)
7	Coat closet or entryway shelf

Week 2: Bigger Zones

Day	Zone	Done
8	One shelf of a closet
9	Under the bathroom sink
10	Pantry — expired and duplicate items
11	One drawer of clothes (socks, underwear, workout gear)
12	Digital declutter — photos or apps you don't use
13	A "catch-all" surface (desk, nightstand, counter)
14	Final walk-through — anything still bothering you?

AI companion prompt: "I'm decluttering [specific zone] and keep getting stuck deciding whether to keep [specific item]. Ask me a few questions to help me decide, based on how often I actually use it and how I'd feel replacing it later."

Handling the Hard Categories

Sentimental items, "just in case" items, and gifts

Category	A gentler way to decide
Sentimental items	Keep the best few, photograph the rest before letting go
"Just in case" items	If it's been unused for a year and replaceable for under $20, it can go
Gifts you don't use	The gift's purpose (the gesture) was already fulfilled — keeping it unused doesn't honor it more
"I might fit this again"	Keep a small, honest number — not a whole separate wardrobe of hope

FOURTEEN ZONES, DONE

Small Wins Actually Add Up

Look back at Day 1 — that's real, visible progress, not a fantasy weekend that never happened.
