Most resets ask for a month you don't have. This one is built to be used again and again - a 48-hour reset you can reach for any time things feel cluttered, behind, or off, whether that's once a season or once a month. Four short passes: clear your space, clear your mind, clear your calendar, clear your body. Do them in an afternoon, or spread them across a weekend.

Use this reset when:

- ☐ Your space feels like it's closing in on you
- ☐ You're carrying ten open loops in your head
- ☐ Your calendar feels like it belongs to everyone but you
- ☐ You just need a clean start, no specific reason required

Clear Your Space

20-30 minutes

Pick one space - not the whole house. A surface, a corner, a drawer, your car. Clear it completely, wipe it down, and put back only what actually belongs there. The goal isn't a deep clean; it's one space that, when you walk past it, makes you feel like you have your life together - even if nothing else has changed yet.

Which space did you choose, and how did it feel to see it clear?

Clear Your Mind

10-15 minutes

Set a timer and brain-dump everything you're carrying - tasks, worries, half-finished thoughts, things you're avoiding. Don't organize it as you go, just get it out of your head and onto the page. Once the timer's up, circle the three items that actually matter and cross out anything that was never really yours to carry.

What surprised you about what came out?

Clear Your Calendar

10 minutes

Look at the next 7 days. Find one thing you agreed to out of guilt, habit, or fear of disappointing someone - and either cancel it, delegate it, or shrink it down to the smallest version that still counts. Protecting one hour on purpose does more for how you feel than adding ten new habits.

What did you remove or renegotiate?

Clear Your Body

15-20 minutes

Pick one: a walk outside, a full glass of water followed by a real meal, an early bedtime tonight, or ten minutes of stretching. The point isn't the workout - it's giving your body one unrushed, undistracted signal that you're taking care of it.

Which one did you choose, and how do you feel now?

CLOSE THE RESET

Before You Go Back to Normal

Which of the four resets made the biggest difference to how you feel right now?

What's one thing from today you want to carry forward, even in a small way?
