

CEO GIRL AI

The Offer Builder System

Step 2 of 6: A validated idea isn't a business yet. This is how you turn it into something a stranger can say yes to in under a minute.

"People don't buy ideas. They buy offers."

CEO GIRL AI

WELCOME

From Idea to Irresistible Offer

Why most good ideas never sell

An idea is "I could help people with their finances." An offer is "A 4-week program that gets overwhelmed freelancers from financial chaos to a working budget system, with weekly check-ins and templates included, for $197." Same idea. Only one of those gets bought. This system walks you through building the second version.

By the end, you'll have:

- ☐ A complete offer stack (the core deliverable plus what makes it feel valuable)
- ☐ A name that signals what it is and who it's for
- ☐ A one-sentence offer statement that sells itself
- ☐ Answers ready for the 5 objections that stop people from buying
- ☐ A soft-launch plan to test it before a big public launch

The Anatomy of an Offer

Five parts, all required

Part	Question it answers	Your answer
Who	Exactly who is this for?
Problem	What specific problem does it solve?
Transformation	What's different for them after?
Delivery	How do they actually get it (format, timeline)?
Price	What does it cost, and why is that fair?

The Transformation Test

Write the "before" and "after" for your ideal customer. If the after doesn't feel meaningfully different from the before, the offer needs more substance, not more features.

After

Building Your Offer Stack

The core thing, plus what makes it feel like more

An offer stack isn't about piling on bonuses until it feels heavy — it's about removing every reason to hesitate. Keep the core deliverable focused, then add 1–3 things that solve the objections you already know people will have.

Layer	What it is
Core deliverable
Bonus #1 (solves a specific hesitation)
Bonus #2 (optional)
Support/access (calls, community, email support)
Guarantee or risk-reversal (if any)

Naming Your Offer

A name should signal what it is and who it's for — not just sound catchy

Naming Formula Options

- [Outcome] + [Format] — "The 30-Day Client Pipeline System"
- [Audience] + [Transformation] — "The Overwhelmed Freelancer's Money Reset"
- A signature phrase that's just yours, if your brand is strong enough to carry it alone

Name option	What it signals

AI companion prompt: "Here's my offer: [describe it]. Give me 10 name options using different formulas — outcome-based, audience-based, and one signature-style name — and explain what each one signals to a potential buyer."

Your One-Sentence Offer Statement

The sentence that goes on your sales page, your bio, and in every DM

Fill in the template

"[Offer name] helps [who] get [transformation] in [timeframe], without [common frustration]."

Say It Out Loud

Read it to someone who has no context on your business. If they have to ask "wait, what is it?" afterward, it's not specific enough yet.

Handling Objections Before They Happen

Every offer has the same five hesitations underneath

Objection	Your honest answer
"It's too expensive"
"I don't have time for this"
"I've tried things like this before and they didn't work"
"I'm not sure this is really for someone like me"
"I can just figure this out myself for free"

AI companion prompt: "Here's my offer and its price: [describe]. Help me write an honest, non-defensive response to the objection: "This feels like something I could figure out on my own for free."

The Soft-Launch Plan

Test the offer on a small audience before the big launch in Step 5

Your Founding Round

Before your full 30-Day Launch (Step 5), sell this offer to 3-5 people at a discounted "founding" rate in exchange for feedback and a testimonial. Who could you reach out to directly this week?

Name	Why they're a fit	How you'll reach out

OFFER BUILT

You Have Something to Sell Now

Not an idea — an actual offer, with a name, a price, and answers ready for the pushback. Next: get precise on exactly who it's for.
